ALIENISTS EXAMINE RICHESON

SLAYER SANE, SAYS DR. CILLEY

SWEETHEART ACCUSES DORR

FOSS WILL REFER PLEA TO COUNCIL IF EXPERTS FIND RICHESON INSANE

VOL. 9—No. 52. BOSTON, SATURDAY, MAY 11, 1912. Registered in U. S. Patent Office. PRICE ONE CENT.

Clarence V. T. Richeson will today be examined at the Charles Street Jail by three more alienists, specially named by Governor Foss, in a final effort to settle beyond question the problem of his sanity.

The alienists are Dr. Morton Prince of Boston, Dr. Henry B. Stedman of the Taunton Insane Asylum and Dr. Walter E. Fernald, superintendent of the Massachusetts School for the Feeble-Minded.

When their reports are handed to him, Governor Foss will have the opinions of six of the State's foremost alienists on Richeson's mental condition. Governor Foss has stated that the question of the prisoner's sanity is the only question in the whole case, so far as his actions are concerned.

DR. CILLEY CALLS RICHESON SANE.

Meanwhile Dr. G. G. Cilley, physician at the Charles Street Jail has issued a startling statement, declaring that Richeson is absolutely sane.

Dr. Cilley is not an alienist who has been named by Foss to make a report. He is a practising practitioner, who has been in attendance upon Richeson, in his capacity of jail physician, daily for weeks.

His opinion of Richeson's sanity is opposed to the known opinions of Dr. Edward Blake and Dr. I. H. Coriat, and it is understood that Dr. L. Vernon Briggs has also decided Richeson is not sane.

Thus answers may be made to the question of Richeson's sanity. The Governor has announced what his course would be in each case.

If the Governor is convinced Richeson is sane, the prisoner will pay the penalty of his crime according to the sentence of the court.

If it happens that Richeson was insane at the time of his murderous deed, Governor Foss will refer the plea to the Council and hope that Richeson's life be spared.

If the Governor finds that Richeson was sane at the time of his deed, but has been driven mad by brooding over his crime and by the horror of self which prompted his act of mutilation and led to his confession, then he will seek to secure at least a respite for the prisoner.

He will ask, according to Secretary Dudley M. Holman, that Richeson be confined in an asylum as long as he remains insane and be executed if his senses return to normal.

Governor Issues Statement.

The Governor has issued a statement of his attitude in the case, and the present status of the Richeson plea, so far as he is concerned. From it the probable course of events during the days between now and May 18 may be gathered, thus:

Today, the three alienists will examine Richeson, either in his cell or in the reception room at the jail.

Tomorrow, they will spend in completing their reports. Dr. L. Vernon Briggs, at

MINISTER GIVES BOY 48 LASHES

CONCORD, N. H., May 11.—Arrested on the charge of "aggravated assault" upon an eleven-year-old boy, Rev. John Knox Tibbitts, chaplain and superintendent of the Millville Orphans' Home, testified in the Concord Municipal Court that he cut a stick three feet in length, as thick as his little finger at the middle, and that he struck the boy on his bare back forty-eight times with as much force as he could muster.

Arthur Watson took the stand first and told that he had been whipped. He did not know the exact size of the stick, but knew that forty-eight blows had been struck.

"When I took off my clothing that night," said the boy, "I pulled the scabs off where the skin had been cut."

Tibbitts was called in his own defense. This is the sworn story that he told in court.

"Arthur Watson is a bad boy, and it has been suggested that it will be necessary to remove him from the Home to the State Industrial School at Manchester, On March 4 last the matron, Mrs. Mary H. Bartlett, telephoned me that Arthur had been guilty of petty thieving. I did not go over to the home that day, but the following day, Saturday, I went over and talked with the boy.

"He admitted that he had stolen thirty-five cents and some shoe strings; the former from one of the boys in the home and the shoestrings from St. Paul's School.

"I followed along soon after, and on my way out I cut a stick, about three feet in length and as large as one's finger. When I arrived Arthur was ready for his punishment, all his clothes having been removed. I took him by the arm and struck him twenty-four times with the stick. I struck him with as much force as I could muster.

"He struggled a great deal and screamed. I then waited about two or three minutes and then, holding him in the same manner, I struck him twenty-four times more, again using all the force that I had. He was much excited and crying loudly, and I had him sent to his room and put in bed. Later I sent Mrs. Bartlett up to his room to comfort him as best she could."

Judge Fletcher, addressing Tibbitts, said:

"Public sentiment had nothing to do with it, and I hope that you will see left public sentiment defer you in the future. The defendant is released."

Inquest Today to Place Blame for Building Collapse

Police and Finance Commission Probe Edinboro Street Crash; Commissioner Everett Reports.

Chief Inspector of Police Joseph Dugan will today conduct an inquest on the death of Louis Arofson in the collapse of the building at Nos. 17-19 Edinboro street, in which six other men were injured.

Louis Secher of No. 12 Lynde street, the most seriously injured, is not expected to live. The rest are reported at the hospital as not in danger.

Building Commissioner Everett, whose department inspected the building some time ago, and saw no dangerous conditions, has submitted a report on the accident to Mayor Fitzgerald.

For the Finance Commission, Consulting Engineer Guy C. Emerson is conducting an independent investigation which may have strong bearing on the commission's coming report on the building department. A large number of accidents have taking place since Mr. Everett assumed office in 1908.

If the police investigation finds negligence caused the accident, the matter will be brought to the attention of the grand jury.

NOBEL PRIZE FOR LATE W. T. STEAD SEEMS ASSURED

I have further been instructed to apprise you that your letter and the annexed documents will be laid before the committee. Yours truly,

RAGNVALD MOE, Secretary.

The Budget also publishes letters from the Bishop of London, the Bishop of Lincoln, Lord Weardale, M. P., Israel Zangwill, the Lord Mayor of Dublin, the Lord Provost of Glasgow and other eminent men favoring the project.

PACKERS PAID FEDERAL MEN

Chicago Society Woman Charges Inspectors Drove Small Dealers Out of Business.

WASHINGTON, May 11.—Evidence in possession of the Congressional investigating Committee today that government meat inspectors, while pretending to inspect cattle in the interest of public health, were really in the pay of Armour & Company, and drove out of business persons obnoxious to the richest beef packer.

Still more remarkable, the charge is made, not by small dealers or interested persons, but one of Chicago's wealthiest social leaders and philanthropists—Mrs. Scott Durand.

And the charge involves not minor employes of Armour & Co., but Arthur Meeker, the general manager for Armour, who moves in the same high social circles as Mrs. Scott Durand.

Her statement was filed with Representative Nelson of Wisconsin, and tells how Mr. Meeker put her famous dairy, Crabtree Farm, out of existence because he regarded her as a rival.

Mrs. Durand to Testify.

Mrs. Durand tells how she trapped the government meat inspectors sent by Meeker to condemn her herd, and how they actually inspected and passed for the Armour warehouses cows they had condemned as tubercular on her farm. Mrs. Durand has been subpoenaed and she will take the stand next week.

It became known today that the packers are bringing every pressure to bear to block the inquiry.

Mrs. Durand, in a statement mailed to Representative Nelson, says in part:

"Believing I could not better protect my energy for the betterment of my fellowbeings than by improving the milk supply of the city of Chicago, I became interested in the production of milk during the Winter of 1904 and 1905. I gave up my home and lived in a small house on my farm, actually working with my hands.

"On May 1, 1910, by herd was tuberculin tested and with the exception of three head recently purchased, none of my original herd or home herd reacted. Those three animals were immediately killed.

"On May 1, through the earnest solicitation of my Chicago agent, I permitted the Chicago Medical Society Milk Commission to certify my product. Shortly after I received a notice that that commission had decided to employ government men at the stockyards to tuberculin test all herds certified by the commission.

Found Agents Officious.

It was intimated to me through an outside source that Mr. Arthur Meeker, manager for Armour & Co., was instrumental in having this done. The commission sent word to me it wished my herd immediately tested by government men. As my herd had been tested a short time before and was not tubercular I was unwilling to have my herd tested so soon again, and particularly during the heat of Summer, but in October, six months from previous testing, would permit them to do so.

"I received notice in October that on a certain date the government agent would be at my place. We had something less than seventy cows to be tested, and a crew of young men were sent out sufficient to test three times that number. I found them very officious, and when I put in an objection that cows near parturition should not be tested, as a test would not be reliable, was answered:

"We are doing the work here and can cut off the certification of your milk, if necessary."

MISS JULIA BALLINGER, WHO ACCUSES HER FIANCEE

$6,200,000 Given to Technology in Year

Bequest of Charles H. Pratt May Be Available for New Cambridge Site at Once.

The $7,500,000 gift for a school of naval architecture and marine engineering at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology is the will of Charles Herbert Pratt, the Beacon street lawyer, makes the gifts to the institution for the year total $6,200,000. These are as follows:

Commonwealth of Mass.	$1,000,000
Unknown donor	2,500,000
Coleman Du Pont	200,000
Alumni gift	200,000
Mrs. Emma G. Rogers bequest	500,000
Greene bequest	600,000
Charles H. Pratt bequest	750,000
Minor gifts	50,000
Total	$6,200,000

There is a proviso in Mr. Pratt's will that the fund might not be available before twenty-one years. But this is the method that suggested to the legal mind to fix a maximum limit to the time before founding the school. As a matter of fact, the probability is that the fulfilment of the plans will be possible within two years, or even within a shorter time, so that in the building up of the new Technology in Cambridge the Pratt School may be planned for with the rest.

KING GEORGE BALKED ON SUBMARINE TRIP

LONDON, May 11.—Despite the brilliant stories printed broadcast by the press of England about King George's plunk in voyaging to the submarine Weymouth and the distinction he achieved as the first submarine monarch, the fact is that the King did not go beneath the water. The King declined to visit the new hospital of which he is a patron, or the famous convict prison of Portland. The councillors are angry at this treatment by royalty.

RECORD RAIN STORM ADDS TO TERROR OF NEW ORLEANS FLOOD

NEW ORLEANS, May 11.—A rain storm, the worst on the local weather bureau's records, has ravaged southern Louisiana and put an additional strain upon the already overtaxed levees.

The wind ranged from twenty-seven miles an hour at New Orleans to forty miles at Baton Rouge and at many points along the river it swept the waves of the swollen stream over the levees.

ISMAY BACK HOME, KEPT IN SECLUSION

SOUTHAMPTON, May 11.—J. Bruce Ismay, managing director of the White Star Line, kept to his stateroom on the liner Adriatic, which docked here, according to passengers. Mrs. Ismay came out to meet her husband in a tender, and an affecting scene marked their reunion.

Prisoner in Mental and Physical Collapse on Trip From California to Salem Jail.

The strongest piece of evidence in the case against William A. Dorr, who will reach Lynn today to wait trial on a charge of murdering George E. Marsh, is furnished by Miss Julia Ballinger, Dorr's sweetheart.

The inspectors who went to Stockton to get Dorr say Miss Ballinger declares Dorr told her the parties who were handling the estate left Miss Orpha Marsh were a "pack of thieves," and that he said: "I will go East and get that old man Marsh, yet!"

The girl is ready to come East and testify against her former fiance. She is angered at an incident that occurred before Dorr came East. He took back the ring he had given her, on a pretext, and never returned it.

Dorr will be lodged in the Salem Jail to await trial under his indictment.

Dorr is reported to have been in an almost complete mental collapse during his trip East. He seemed, according to the inspectors, to be living in a constant dull horror, afraid to speak, afraid to be left alone, afraid of others and of himself.

Dorr has refused steadfastly to answer questions put to him. He sat in a dull

Boston's Incompetent Building Department Costs Many Lives

One man was killed and six others seriously hurt yesterday in the collapse of a building under process of construction.

The supports of the building gave way. "The rain did it," said the contractor.

BUT, the building had been declared safe and sound on May 3, just seven days ago, by Commissioner Arthur G. Everett's building department.

Building Commissioner Everett hurried to the scene of yesterday's building collapse AFTER it was over. It will be remembered he personally inspected the Revere House ruins AFTER three lives had been lost.

The Finance Commission has been slowly investigating Mr. Everett during the past six months. During just this time fourteen lives have been lost in Boston in fires and building accidents.

Are the deaths to continue? Are people to be burned to death while trying to find fire escapes where they do not exist? Are buildings to continue to fall down and kill people until the Finance Commission is ready to report?

We long ago asked the question: Why is Mr. Everett? Let us add to it:

Mr. Mayor Fitzgerald and gentlemen of the Finance Commission, why is Mr. Everett allowed to remain in office after fourteen lives have been sacrificed as the result of an incompetent building department in six months alone?

RICHESON, ON KNEES, BEGS TO STAY AT CHARLES STREET JAIL CELL

Sheriff Quinn walked into Richeson's cell and said: "Richeson you are to be taken to Charlestown tomorrow." "Don't send me away!" cried Richeson. "These may be my last days on earth. I don't know what is going to happen to me. Why can't I remain here? I am happy here. You're good to me, and let me stay." if these few days are to be my last.

The sheriff started to make answer. Before he had opportunity Richeson had fallen on his knees. Tears filled his eyes. He clutched at the sheriff's hand, and in tones of anguish continued his supplication. "Don't transfer me now. Don't!" he implored. "Let me remain where I am—where you're kind to me."

The sheriff thought a moment, and then gave his consent.

his home in Hanover, will also complete his report.

Monday, the three reports based on today's examination, with Dr. Briggs' findings, will be handed to the Governor. He will spend Tuesday in examining them, and it is thought there is no doubt that on Wednesday, Governor Foss will refer the case to the Council.

Wednesday is May 15. Under Richeson's sentence, he would probably die on May 20. Monday morning, son after midnight. Whether he will die on that date or whether the Council will allow him to live, is yet to be decided. On the calendar that must stand ever before his mind's eye, Richeson sees where May 20 should stand only a huge, black question mark.

The alienists have, or will have reported to Governor Foss upon the sanity of Richeson. They have each made one or more examinations of the man in his cell, Dr. G. G. Cilley has made no formal report. But he has seen Richeson daily for some time, attends him regularly, and talks freely with the prisoner.

Dr. Cilley's Statement.

"According to the definition of insanity-thinking that is which is not-Richeson is nothing more than an abnormally selfish man. This explains why he became a slayer.

"Almost universally, demented persons protest against those who had to do with their arrest and conviction. Richeson has now related probably every important happening in his career, which is one of supreme struggle.

"First, he was obliged to shift for himself and fight every inch for the necessaries of life. As he was intelligent, he got more than enough to keep himself alive, and then came suddenly, the lured Avis Linnell, bur coveted the Edmands girl's fortune. All through his life he had fought and gained his ends. And, when he found himself in trouble last November, he would not allow himself to be beaten down.

"His hard life had developed his selfishness to such a point that he was capable of murder. He used his acquaintances to help him in the furtherance of his scheme. Nothing which he has said or done in jail indicates an incapacity mentally to realize that when he bought the poison from Druggist Hahn, he could not forsee his danger in having the sale brought to light.

"Expected Suicide Verdict."

"He counted on the Linnell girl's following his instructions in going to bed as soon as she took the poison, and then the world would have called it a case of suicide. Richeson, in his supreme selfishness, wished to get her out of the way.

"All his early training stood him in good stead when he was ready to give her the poison.

"Richeson, in talks with the examining physicians, has never to my knowledge confounded fact and fancy. This indicates that he is sane. Dr. Briggs says that Richeson is insane and cannot distinguish between right and wrong.

"Certainly he can make this distinction, but the reason he does wrong throughout his career is because his ambition to accomplish his end is all that he has in mind. His is a nature which is not carried away by the impulse of the moment or yet yields to strong propensities, for he starts out to do a thing and does it.

"Richeson has recently been asked by one of the alienists whether he considered himself insane. He pulled out a mouthful of smoke and said, 'No, I'm not insane.' Almost all others in a similar position would have called those who had to do with his downfall insane.

"Health Shows Sanity."

"Richeson's perfect physical health tends to prove that he is not insane. His perfect composure has kept him from worry coming to other prisoners. One day he asked me this: 'Doctor, isn't this the day they are to take me over to Charlestown?' I said that it was not. He replied that evidently the government was not carrying out its plans. He fully realized his predicament in asking the question.

"My belief is that Richeson was never a religious man. He preached to get a living. He does not pray, so far as I know. That part of his confession in which he expressed a wish to live in order that he might help others in prison was said with the same insincerity and deliberation which has caused him to go after his objects all through his life."

Dr. Briggs, with instruments has, found that there is a numbness in the prisoner's right arm and extending down through the fourth and fifth fingers. This matter will probably be brought out as tending to show that the nervous system has already begun to break down, but a little accident to the nerve might have caused this.

"After all, it is Governor Foss and the councilors who will have to decide whether Richeson is insane, as the experts are on both sides of the question. Expects reason deliberately, that is, starting with a theory either to be proved or disproved.

"I have seen Richeson almost every day lately, and, judging from his composure and orderly way of thinking, believe him nothing more than an abnormally selfish man who fell because it was with him 'any means in a end.'"

Governor's Statement.

The statement of Dudley M. Halwan, outlining Governor Foss' position in the case, follows:

"Public interest in the Richeson case demands that a statement be made of the facts as they exist at the present time in order that there may be no misunderstanding in the public mind.

"The case is one of such unutterable horror that one is apt to be entirely swayed to favor the commutation of the death sentence of Clarence V. T. Richeson.

Without excepting all members of the Governor's council refused to be quoted as to their opinions, but in the few questions that they asked as to the result of the insanity tests, it is believed that a number of the members are not in favor of any change in the sentence.

'Men Here Not 'Old Maids,' but Rude and Conceited'

"Where else in the world will you see the men remaining seated while women, and sometimes old women, remain standing in the street cars? Where else can a woman step in an elevator and the men continue smoking and never a thought of removing their hats? Where else can a woman enter a man's office and he remain seated with his feet on the table and calmly continue to puff his cigar?—Dr. Gertrude T. Bodfish.

'True Bostonians Self-Centred,' Says Dr. Bodfish

Noted Woman Physician, However, Knows About Twenty Men in Boston Who Are Exceedingly Courteous.

Boston Men Are Not Progressive Because of Their Utter Satisfaction with Themselves, She Says.

By ELIZABETH ELLIOTT.

"Boston men are not old maidish, but they are rude, self-centred and conceited." So says Dr. Gertrude T. Bodfish, one of the best known women physicians in Boston.

"Where else in the world will you see the men remaining seated in the street cars while women, and sometimes old women, remain standing all about them? Where else in the country can a woman step into an elevator and the men continue smoking and never a thought of removing their hats, and where else in the world can a woman enter a man's office and he remain seated with his feet on the table and calmly continue to puff his cigar?

"They certainly are rude, but I don't think intentionally so. Boston men are for the most part discourteous and it is their self-centredness and conceit which makes them so. When I say they are rude I'm speaking of them collectively, you understand. Individually they're not so bad. I think I know about twenty men in Boston whom I can declare exceedingly courteous."

"Only twenty?" I gasped, but she didn't "get me"—as the boys say.

"Boston men and women both need to get out more, not only out of their homes, but out of their city. The typical Bostonian stays at home too much," continued Dr. Bodfish. "It may be justly said of Boston men that they are not progressive, and that is the result of their utter satisfaction with themselves and their surroundings. A truly progressive person is never satisfied. They never realize their own faults or correct them until they get out and see the faults of others. When they do see the faults of others then that's an inspiration for them to correct their own.

DR. GERTUDE T. BODFISH.

Cannot Be Too Intellectual.

"As for Boston women being too intellectual, there is no such thing as any woman being too intellectual unless she lets her heart atrophy while she cultivates her brain. Intellect combined with warmth and enthusiasm of the heart—that makes the true woman. But the average Boston woman lets her heart wither while she cultivates her brain.

"Still, on the other hand," she continued thoughtfully, "Boston is the greatest city for charities in the world. I think Boston people are too scientific in their expenditures, and that is what makes them appear stingy.

"Why is it, do you suppose, that Boston women don't marry as do the women of others cities?" I asked.

"Simply because they're not men enough to go round. Then, too, because of their high ideals. The women of today can't contents themselves with living in an enclosed basin. It isn't just four walls that make the home for the women of today—the world is their home.

"Four walls would be all right if there were a lot of love there, wouldn't they? Isn't there something wrong with the hearts of the Boston women?" I asked. Being a physician I thought she'd know.

"No, indeed, there's nothing in the world wrong with the hearts of the Boston women. They don't have the impulsive way of showing their affection that the women of the West and South have, but they are steadier.

"You say they don't marry because their ideals are higher. Does that mean that the Boston men are retrograde and therefore unable to reach the ideals of the women?"

Strenuous Life to Blame.

"No, but the conditions of modern life are such that they are prevented from reaching the ideals of the average woman. It's the fault of too strenuous a life and the competitive system—lack of co-operation. It's the ruthless, wicked, relentless competition and the high cost of living that keeps the man of moderate means a bachelor. The man of average means is afraid to ask the very woman who might accept if he had faith to ask her. There is more co-operation among women than among men. Of course, the women in the homes escape the horrors of this gruesome competition."

Do you think a girl out in the world must lose all her womanliness and become as a man in order to succeed?" No, the girls out in the world are naturally more aggressive than the home women. They must be in order to stand their ground. Aggressiveness is not cognoscent you understand, it is simply the ability to stand their ground and fight for their principles. "There is altogether too much talk about Boston men are afraid to travel. They're not afraid to travel. They don't travel much that's true. But its not because they're afraid. Its because conditions here are too severe. They are simply tied to the grindstone with no opportunity to get away. Then too, it may be that they are too self-satisfied to want to get out and see how the rest of the world lives. Boston esteemed are perhaps too fastidious enough. Its a bad plan to let the heart rule the head. The ideal condition is reason and judgment nicely mixed with intuition. The unbalanced condition is but too much intellect and one soft, too much heart—and we have emotionalism."

"But back to the marriage problem."

"Boston men are not necessarily selfish because they do not marry. The high cost of living, as I said before, deters them from it. The greatest trouble in Boston and one of the greatest reasons for our few marriages is that the people are not brought together frequently enough for social purposes. Men are afraid of women and women are compelled by social conditions to be afraid of men.

More Confidence Between Sexes.

"What we need is a little more kindly confidence and trust between the sexes. Marriage need not always be the ultimate conclusion sine of social acquaintance, but by friendly social intercourse it may lead to it.

"Boston people are not truly selfish; they only appear so because they have so many interests in which they are interested or to which they are devoted that it is almost impossible to awaken interest outside of their special affairs. If they were selfish they would not be interested in anything outside of their own circle or home life. But neither can it say they are narrow minded, for the one implies the other. All sorts of fads, follies and foibles find exploitation in Boston, which fact would not be true if Boston people were narrow minded.

"Yes, Southern men are chivalrous, but is it any more than skin deep? It is better to be manly than chivalrous sometimes, and that is what Boston men are striving to be. Possessing a little chivalry would make them about as perfect as a human woman could be."

She loves them—she loves them not—she loves them.

BACKACHE "GETS ON THE NERVES"

"Every Picture Tells a Story"

Many who suffer from backache and weak kidneys are unnaturally irritable, fretful and nervous. Not only does constant backache "get on the nerves," but bad kidneys fail to eliminate all the uric acid from the system, and uric acid irritates the nerves, keeping you "on edge" and causing rheumatic, neuralgic pains. Doan's Pills cure these ills by curing the kidneys. Here's proof:

A Roxbury Woman's Testimony

Mrs. C. J. Becker, 45 Haynes St., Roxbury, says: "I suffered intensely with kidney trouble. My back and head ached. I had terrible spells of dizziness, and was so nervous at times that it seemed I must do something desperate. The action of the kidneys was in bad shape and my appetite was poor. Doan's Kidney Pills and they cured me so thoroughly that my trouble has never returned."

Why Not Go Into the Mail Order Business

Where is the logic in selling your service, to some one else, or to some company or corporation, for $15 a week or even $20 a week when you can MAKE MORE MONEY, with less work and worry, conducting a business for yourself?

An opportunity of this kind came to me, and I accepted it. A similar opportunity is open to you, right now; and no matter what line of work you are in, or are planning to enter, it should cause you to stop and think.

WILLIAM A. HEACOCK
Lockport, N. Y.

When I started in the Mail Order Business I had only $5 IN CASH, but I had the RIGHT PLAN in my head. In five years I made $50,000, and built up a permanently established business.

I will tell you how I did it, and how you should do it; this is more than this—I will help you. I don't know, of course, how much money you will make out of the business in the next five years—that depends VERY LARGELY on the amount of attention you give it.

You may make even a better record than mine, or you may do only half as well; but do you know of any other opportunity that holds out such possibilities to you?

Do this one thing for yourself—INVESTIGATE. Send to-day for my free booklet.

CALL ASTOR WILL CONTEST PROOF

NEW YORK, May 11.—Vincent Astor, the executor of his father's will, and the trustees of the said Astor estate, are firmly convinced that the will of John Jacob Astor will be probated without modification or contest.

It is said that Lewis Cass Ledyard, who drew the will, has conveyed to all the heirs his personal opinion that the instrument is invulnerable.

Vincent Astor is spending the week end at Ferncliff-on-the-Hudson. He will return on Monday to attend a conference between the trustees and executors. The will is to be offered for probate next Friday. It is understood that Mrs. John Astor, mother of Vincent, will leave immediately after the will is offered for probate for London home.

The trustees and executors of the Astor estate also have decided to seek a week's rest as well. They have been attending conferences almost night and day since the Titanic went down.

They have declined to discuss their work in the interim, but they have accepted the resignations of Mr. Ledyard as the attorney for the estate, and Mr. Astor will act in that capacity, succeeding as the Greatest Boston Corporation Lawyer. President James X. Sullivan of the committee with the girls' eight-hour law in Massachusetts, and other leaders, reported that President Keiler had telegraphed A. A. Wilkie, the secretary of the committee, to investigate the girls' statements regarding bad conditions of work.

PHONE GIRLS TO HEAR GOMPERS

President Samuel Gompers of the American Federation of Labor will address the striking operators' union of Boston at a mass meeting in Paine Memorial Hall Sunday, May 26.

The American Federation of Labor recently indorsed the organization of the operators and will stand by them to a man," was the message brought to a meeting here by President Gompers by Miss Margot Gillespie of the Women's Trade Union League acting secretary of the girls' union.

A special organizing committee of 100 which was appointed to complete the work of organizing every operator eligible into the union, met with few rebuffs, decided to make an appeal to every girl who is not a member to enter the ranks. The committee already enrolled 116 new members at its meeting.

At the meeting in Paine Memorial Hall Sunday, May 26, the girls will be addressed by Mr. Gompers, representatives of the Central Labor Union and other prominent labor men. President Keiler had telegraphed A. A. Wilkie, the secretary of the committee, to investigate the girls' statements regarding bad conditions of work.

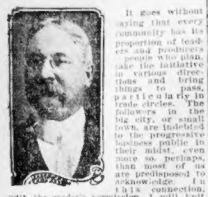
Corbett's Chat



It goes without saying that every community has its proportion of boosters and producers and knockers to glide, take the initiative in various directions and bring things to pass, particularly in local trade circles. The followers in a live city, or small town are indebted to the progressive business public in their midst, even none so, perhaps, that most of us are predisposed to acknowledge. In this connection, with the reader's permission, I will knit together a few lines about some enterprising people engaged in various mercantile pursuits.

THE STORE THAT WINS FRIENDS.

For years I have been in touch, one way and another, with that bustling suppository, Work's "Mr. Clothier," corner of Harvard and Portland streets, and I think the secret of its marvelous growth, from one of the smallest single stores in one of the largest and best department stores, rests in the fact that every one who goes in a new customer makes another friend for that established—and there you are.

HUSTLING WEYMOUTH.

Weymouth, Mass., one of Boston's ideal suburbs, is a wide-awake town, and it also has seven miles of water frontage and plenty of industrial advantages.

Hunt, grocer and provision dealer, believes in Weymouth and the people believe in him. He supplies customers with good goods, at correct prices, and makes friends. He is president of the Board of Trade. Clifton D. Hadley, the druggist, carries a complete stock of drugs, medicines, confectionery, etc. He has an immense soda fount, the highest pharmacist in town there. "Harlow's Busy Corner" is well named. J. Otis Hollis, proprietor of the Mansfield Garage, stores and repairs autos, and furnishes supplies at lowest rates. Mr. Hollis is a master mechanic, of hustling tendencies, and treats patrons right. George Schaaf, the leading local caterer, makes a specialty of serving large or small parties satisfactorily. Wedding and birthday cakes made to order. He conducts a neat, inviting bakery. Robert M. True deals in groceries and provisions, knows his business and customers get benefit of his strictest care in the purchase.

EAST WEYMOUTH.

The Weymouth Light and Power Company, under its present excellent management, has gained the business in the front and is now supplying electricity for light, heat and power to at least 3,500 satisfied customers in Weymouth and somewhere. The company recently spent $60,000 for improvements. A new generating station is in operation July 3. J. Q. Bennett is president; C. B. Adams, treasurer, and George W. Percy, general manager.

SOUTH WEYMOUTH.

The First National Bank, of South Weymouth, established in 1864, has resources of $430,000, and is conservatively controlled by capable financiers. Banking by mail receives every attention.

A. S. Marsh, proprietor of the livery stable, also gives careful attention to moving furniture.

QUINCY ADAMS, MASS.

Brown & Crowell, A. G. Crowell, proprietor since 1903, does an immense business disposing of choice groceries, provisions, dry goods, etc., keeping fifteen clerks on the hop, and six delivery teams on the go. The granite business founded 22 years ago by Angelo Malenfant is successfully managed by Miss Ida Malenfant. A specialty is made of the famous Adams Pink Granite for monumental work. L. Cirlechi manufactures electric and pneumatic machines for polishing marble and granite which have a wide sale. He is assisted by two sons, young men of marked ability. Walter P. Pinel is doing things. He conducts a variety store, deals in new and second hand furniture, crockery, hardware, paints, etc. His "X" furniture polish is fine—"nothing to equal it."

STIRRING SOUTHBRIDGE.

Southbridge, Mass., is making good, has pleasant homes, successful business enterprises, and offers inducements to new industries.

Postmaster Robert A. Beckwith, gentlemanly, capable, accommodating has acceptably filled his position going on fifteen years. During his first year two clerks assisted, there were three mails daily, and receipts were $8,000. Today there are seventeen clerks, seven mails daily, and receipts last year amounted to $25,000. A feature is made of postal savings accounts. The Wessner & Southbridge Gas & Electric Co. make a feature of supplying electrical power at a low cost to manufacturers and others in Webster, Southbridge and adjacent towns and villages and have a well equipped plant for service generally in its line. C. H. Garfield, a man of recognized ability, has been with the company as manager, twelve years.

The Southbridge National bank was founded in 1836, has resources of over $821,700, and extends to customers every courtesy and accommodation consistent with sound banking principles. This bank is manned with those on the roll of honor. George W. Wells is president; H. C. Robinson, cashier. Mr. Robinson was formerly connected with the Bank Commissioners' office, Boston.

The Southbridge Savings Bank, organized in 1855, according to a recent statement of its condition, has deposits of over $2,444,000, with resources of over $2,548,000. A FEW AFTER-THOUGHTS.

Some folks who don't believe in a personal devil ought to look in the looking glass.

AGNES ADAMS, THEATRE USHER IN ODD ROMANCE

AGNES G. ADAMS

The announcement of the engagement of Miss Agnes Gertrude Adams of Main street, Medford, and Valentine J. Rein of No. 29 Stoneleigh street, Dorchester, today brought to the minds of their friends one of the few romances of a theatre which did not have its inception across or behind the footlights.

Miss Adams is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph W. Adams and a member of an old Medford family. She became an usher at the Castle Square Theatre, where Rein was a weekly patron and they met. Rein's visits to the theatre became more frequent and his friends began to realize that it wasn't the show he went to see.

They are to be married in November. Rein is well known in Dorchester, where he is in business with his father. He is a member of several social and political clubs.

Miss Adams is the youngest member of Tent 22, Daughters of Veterans of Medford. She is a swimmer of note and fond of outdoor sports. Her grandfather was the first to enlist from Medford in the Civil War. He was color bearer sergeant in Company G, Thirty-ninth Massachusetts.

WOMAN BETTER AFTER BLOOD TRANSFUSION

Mrs. Celia Bernstein of No. 69 Chambers street, is rapidly recovering from a serious illness as a result of what was probably the most successful blood transfusion ever performed in Boston. Her brother, Thomas Stirling, volunteered to undergo the ordeal of giving his blood to his sister.

MISS BALLINGER ACCUSES DORR

stupor for almost every side of the night. When he awoke he would start to himself: "I am innocent. I am innocent."

When the officers persist in questioning him, he becomes absolutely silent. He has declared he doesn't remember where he was during the hours before the murder, and when told where the body is buried, replies:

"You are taking me on a strange plan. I have never been there."

At Cleveland he became so nervous that an attempt at suicide was feared and he was given a sleeping potion. Miss Florence Thomas, a nurse from Stockton, is in charge of the patient there.

Two pieces of evidence have been discovered by the police upon which they base great weight. One is a letter written by Miss Sophie Hirsch and mailed from New York, parts of which have been found. The other is a diary, said to be kept by Dorr during his stay in Lynn.

"It Is All Over."

"It is all over," is a phrase alleged to be written at the bottom of the page in the diary under date of April 11, the day George Marsh was murdered. Another entry is: "Oh, my God! the negro has done it."

The entry April 11, it is said, then tells how Dorr got up early and then went out and waited near the home of George Marsh. How he saw the old man walking about the Marsh home, talking to neighbors, took of Marsh trip in the electric in company with a woman named Clements, of Central square, Lynn, and how Marsh entered the hotel and Dorr followed. Dorr also registered at the Hotel and that Marsh rode with him there at 2 P.M. Dorr also stated how he called for Marsh.

The two phrases: "It is all over," and "Oh, my God! the negro has done it"—are considered as most important evidence in the case.

Dorr, who was one of the Bean Brute Mob of Stockton, and previously sought to sang in the Baptist Church choir with Zollie Clements, his wife.

Clements is also under arrest charged with murder in Stockton. He has been accused of killing five men in California in the last few years. He told Dorr were unseparable and when Dorr was showing signs of weakening to free all when both were confined in the same cell, Clements called him a coward.

"He a man. Dorr don't quit until the bell rings," scoffed Clements. The day the Lynn officers arrested Clements told the inspectors Dorr was a fool.

Claim Dorr Dyed Hair.

Dorr was going on 4 o'clock as Inspectors Kane and Riordan opened the room, and he sat up in bed and said:

"Well, how come the men who are to take me to the asylum."

He was told he was going to be taken back, and Dorr asked: "Well, if that is so I want a hair cut and shave."

As the attendant was said to be the request, all the officers want to show that Dorr dyed his hair after leaving Lynn.

Unknown to Dorr his aunt, Miss Sophie Marsh, with whom he had lived for nine years, who had made a will leaving all her estate of $7,000 to Dorr, gave up the case the first clew to the murderer and aided the Stockton police in the arrest. When she received the letter telling how Marsh was dead, she at once called Chief of Police Frank Bilger of Stockton on the telephone. To the chief she expressed her belief that Dorr had killed her uncle for adoption.

WOODRUFF CASE TO END MONDAY

Two witnesses in rebuttal are expected to be called when the Woodruff divorce suit is resumed Monday in the Dedham Court before Judge King. With the exception of these witnesses, the evidence is all in. Judge King has already by a formal finding exonerated Mrs. Frances P. Givernaud, named as co-respondent by Mrs. Mildred Hoyt Woodruff.

Mrs. Mildred Woodruff was called again to the witness stand and testified in rebuttal to testimony that had been given against her.

Dr. Robert F. Souther, who has been named by Mr. Woodruff in his libel, said that he had been a physician and surgeon since 1889.

"It is not true," said Dr. Souther, "that I was a frequent visitor to the home of the Woodruffs in Brookline while Mr. Woodruff was away. It is not true that Mrs. Woodruff and I met together away from a party in the dark."

Dr. Souther also said: "There is no truth in regard to the specification that referred to Mrs. Woodruff and myself taking shower and stocking off while sitting in a dory and the water coming into the water. This is absolutely false."

"Bring Down Some Booze."

He told of helping to clean up the kitchen one morning with Scott Woodruff, who had gotten luncheon ready the day the cook left. "We both played tennis after words," said Dr. Souther. "We later went in bathing, I remaining but a short while, because I had to go to Boston, where I was to operate the next day. When I was ready to leave Mr. Woodruff came down Friday, and Scott to I use to be safe and bring down something to drink. I went down the next day, I received a letter from Scott the next day thanking me for it."

Mrs. Woodruff never called me any names. He always addressed me politely. I never was intimated in any way disrespectful to her company. Yes, I may have written letters to Mrs. Woodruff; I think I did.

Mrs. Givernaud Witness.

Mrs. Frances B. Givernaud of Cambridge took up the greater part of the morning session. She told of being employed as nurse for the senior Woodruff family and also for Hoyle and the family, before her marriage and afterward.

She said it was true that she had been in the company of Mrs. Woodruff frequently. It was always in the presence of members of the family or any intimate. I never went away with him to my knowledge. Never had a ride with him.

Yes, he was kissed me. It was at the North Station when Mildred and my husband were present. It is true that he stayed at my house, but my husband was present. Mr. Woodruff and his brother paid board for their rooms. They paid their board. It is not true that he entertained me.

In response to a question who called her names she said it was Mrs. Woodruff who nicknamed her that.

COLD DINNERS ARE DESERTION CAUSE

Cold dinners every day, because of the cook's drunkenness, formed the sole reason for desertion, according to Mrs. Mary F. Lord of Somerville, who contested the divorce libel brought by her husband, George F. Lord, in the divorce session at East Cambridge. Judge Keating took the case under advisement.

Chamber Warns Against Haste on Railroad Lease

The Board of Directors of the Boston Chamber of Commerce, by vote of a large majority of its members, have accepted a report from the chamber's committee on transportation that no great detriment to the public welfare would result if legislative action with regard to the proposed lease of the Boston & Maine to the New York & New Haven were postponed, but that, on the contrary, great detriment would result should a bill permitting such a lease be hurried through at this session of the Legislature.

The committee expresses its further belief that no immediate emergency exists to warrant hasty, ill-considered legislation, and declares that undue haste in adopting a so-called "constructive policy" is more likely to be destructive of the public welfare than it is to protect it. The committee suggests that action be deferred until there has been a full investigation of the situation by an able and impartial tribunal.

SAYS ARCHBALD 'SWUNG' OPTION

WASHINGTON, May 11.—That Judge Robert W. Archbald, whose conduct the House Judiciary Committee is investigating with a view to possible impeachment proceedings, engineered both the purchase and sale of the $40,000 culm pile was the testimony at the hearing resumed today. Edward J. Williams, a coal dealer of Scranton, Pa., resumed the stand.

The committee was investigating an alleged transaction between James H. Dainty, Judge Archbald and the Lehigh Valley Railroad. It involved the Ebenhart property.

Williams was asked if he and Dainty did not regard Judge Archbald as the "real negotiator" for the lease of the Eberhart property by the Lehigh Valley.

"I thought Judge Archbald might be able to swing it," replied Williams. "I thought he could try it anyway."

The witness was asked through whose influence he was negotiating to sell to culm bank property to Mr. Conn of the Lamet line. He said that Judge Archbald began the negotiations.

AUTO CLEW IN 'CROSS' MYSTERY

NEW HAVEN, May 11.—The man whose body forms the centre of the so-called "Green Cross" mystery was a Canadian chauffeur, who came into New England exchanged Canadian money for American at Manchester, N. H., continued to New Haven and there either shot himself or was murdered, according to the police theory here today.

Efforts of the police of both New Haven and Manchester have failed to lift much of the veil which covers the mystery as to the man's identity. The theory that the man was a chauffeur is based on the fact that an automobile ball-bearing was found in one of his pockets.

The Canadian theory arises from the presumption that the man drew money from ex exchanged money at the First National Bank at Manchester, N. H.

One-half of the $400 on his person was in new bills, held together by a band stamped with the name of the Manchester bank.

But the bank officials cannot place the man. They were shown a photograph of the dead man's face. They recall no such man drawing or exchanging $200 or any other amount at their bank.

Despatches today from Manchester say that the Manchester police received a photograph from the New Haven police. They took this photograph to the First National Bank but secured no identification.

Neither could the bank clerks recall any customer or caller who had a green cross tattooed on his right wrist. This mark has called particular attention to the case and has given it the name, in police discussion, of the "Green Cross Mystery."

The Manchester police next went to the tailor shop of J. Pherrien, because the New Haven descriptions say that the man wore a coat labelled "J. Pherrien, Manchester, N. H."

Pherrien was out of town, but both his bookkeeper and clerk, who know his customers, say the photograph means nothing to them.

The Manchester police have only one source of information left. If Pherrien himself fails to recognize the picture as that of any past or recent customer, then the trail ends, so far as present clews go.

Nevertheless, the police will show the picture to some of the leaders in the Greek and French settlements in Manchester. If the man was either Greek or Canadian and was known in Manchester at all, some clew to his identity may be picked up in that way.

But the result of the queries in Manchester, as reported by the Manchester police to the local officials, gives little hope so far.

It was first reported that the man was a Greek in appearance, but the police now say that he may be of French-Canadian descent. He was dark enough for either.

The police are receiving letters from other cities, asking information of the man and details of the body, one letter coming from a city in New Jersey.

None of the letters, according to the police, throw any light on this particular case because the man sought by the writers does not fit the detailed description of the man with the green cross on his wrist whose body was found in the Whalley avenue woods.

But the letters indicate the widespread interest that has been aroused in the mystery and the range of the cases in the press. The police are glad of this, too, for they hope by it to have some clue thrust at them which will lead to the man's name.

LUCK NO FRIEND TO PILGRIMS

ST. LOUIS, May 11.—The Pilgrims are sure enough fighting hard luck, as was demonstrated by yesterday's struggle here. The visitors from the Hub did not get any of the breaks that came and so were on the small end at the final count.

But it was a mighty hard game for Kling and his scrappy little band to lose. However, the owner leader, known as "Nixey John," feels confident that they will corral today's game.

Hub Purdue did the digging for the Boston folks, and he wriggled out of five tight holes, which is a pretty fair accomplishment. The Cards nicked Hub for two of the tallies, but the third came as a result of errors. Purdue had remarkable control and passed only one batter, which is a mighty fine record in view of the fact that the Cards have a reputation for waiting them out.

There was a lot of luck attached to the St. Louis victory, and the absence of Devlin hurt the Bostons. He protested so loudly in the first inning that he was chased, and Spratt, who succeeded him at the shortstopping job, let a couple of hits amble past which, if they had been fielded, might have changed the course of the battle.

Boston kicked on everything and the few fans present were stunned. Last season the Boston club, then called the Doves, stood for anything, just like the present Browns, but today they were out fighting for everything they considered their right.

One lucky stab prevented a Boston victory in the sixth. With Spratt on first, Houser smashed a long liner far over Ocker' head. The center fielder ran for the ball and, with his back to the grandstand, leaped high in the air. The ball struck his glove and stuck.

It looked like a sure home run. Spratt thought so and was almost to the plate when the catch was made, and fell an easy victim to a double play.

Even then the Pilgrims rallied in the ninth when McDonald and Kling singled with one out. Gowdy batted for Perdue and Meinel, while Hogan lifted an easy fly to Evans.

RILEY'S COLUMN

TY COBB went out of town in another "blaze of glory." The greatest ball player of them all is in meaner temper than ever this year and stamped around the Hotel Brunswick last night, hurling broadcast the vilest and most objectionable language that a man can use, because the writer of this column had disclosed Cobb's arbitrary rule in the Detroit team. Cobb ended by challenging the writer to a duel, which he wanted to fight either in the Hotel Brunswick or the Hotel Touraine lobby.

* * *

COBB's head has grown out of all proportions; he has lost his judgment completely, and instead of helping the Tigers in the pennant race he is only injuring his team and ruining his own reputation, besides stigmatizing baseball and baseball players before the public.

* * *

JIMMY CALLAHAN thinks that Ed Walsh has ten more years of as good baseball in him as he plays now, and that the big "moist ball" king will outlast Cy Young's remarkable career. This is what the White Sox manager says about his champion flinger:

"Walsh has a perfect pitching motion; he doesn't try to work the batter by throwing waste balls; his disposition is the best; his habits couldn't be improved upon. He is the best pitcher in baseball. There isn't any question in my mind as to that. He has the ability; he has the temperament. What more could a manager ask? A manager does not have to tell Walsh to do anything."

* * *

CALLAHAN speaks thus of Harry Lord, the ex-Red Sox:

"Harry Lord is another fellow much like Walsh. Lord is willing to do anything that will serve to the interests of the Sox. There wasn't a harder worker in the South than Lord. Unlike many star players, he didn't believe he had his place cinched. He believed in putting himself in proper condition. He believed he had to. He wanted to serve his team, and believed that the best way to do so was to get himself in shape.

* * *

DAN BROUTHERS, who used to be the hero of the old National League grounds in Boston, one time champion of the National League, and one of the famous "Big Four," has been night watchman at the Polo Grounds in New York since last Summer, his sole companion being a dog. "I've been sleeping in the daytime for nearly a year," said Big Dan, "and my evening clothes, hanging in the locker, have grown rusty. But I'm getting a good salary and don't care about the sunshine. There's no chance for a burglar to cop the new grandstand while I'm around. You can bet on that."

DUAL MEET AT STADIUM TODAY

Followers of the cinder path and college track athletics will have their chance to see all of the keen competition and fine performances they wish this afternoon in the Harvard Stadium, when the Crimson's band of track and field athletes back up against the Dartmouth speed merchants in their annual dual meet.

The meet this year is expected to be far from a plus tea affair, as last year the Green was victorious for the first time in the history of the meets between the two colleges, and this spring the Harvard coaches are out to wipe this defeat off the slate. The chances appear about even.

Harvard will have, of course, the that little advantage goes with the home field. While this may be some little help in the field events, it is probably more than offset by the fact that the Dartmouth runners and weight men have been working daily in the big gymnasium at Hanover on their 220-yard circular cinder path track. Coach Donovan's charges have had to make the best of some of the most backward springs that has been in years. Rain has hindered the Crimson coaches at every turn, and even after delaying their opening of the training season for two weeks there have been two or three rainy days every week since, and the weather has been far from that which is needed in getting runners into good shape for the big meets.

Crimson Strong in Field.

Dartmouth expects to pile up a large score in the track events, but concede Harvard much in the field events with the exception of the hammer throw and the pole vault. Harvard has many good green athletes, but whether or not they will come through cannot be told in advance.

The dopesters have as usual been at work with a vim, and there are those who favor both teams, some of them finding the result now less a toss-up than on either side, showing the closeness with which the games are sure to result.

The men upon whom Harvard will rely in the track events are as follows: Sergeant, Billings and Adams in the sprints, Burton and Ranney in the quarter, Preble in the half, Lawless in the mile and Captain Whittaker in the two-mile. The field events and hurdles will be taken care of as follows: Hayward in the hammer, Moffat in the high jump, Allen in the broad and Cummings and Jackson in the hurdles.

Besides these there will be a strong string of second-stringers in every event, who will doubtless pick up many points.

The entries and time of events for the meet follow:

Tech Defeats B. A. A. in Practice Meet

Tech's track team easily defeated the B. A. A. team in a practice meet at Tech Field, Brookline, yesterday.

The B. A. A. team was not in good shape, this being especially true of Hedlund, who was beaten in the mile by Germaine, although the latter is running in fine shape and is showing first class form.

Only one first place was taken by a man from the Exeter street organization, the two-mile, which was won by Kimball, who had no trouble in defeating Shedd, the best two-mile man from the Institute.

One of the best races on the card was the contest between Marceau and Rylund, both from Technology. In the Tech-Brown meet last Saturday, Marceau and his teammate ran a dead-heat in the half mile, and it looked as if they were going to repeat the performance yesterday, but Rylund lost out at the tape, both men running neck-and-neck up the stretch.

WALSH TO MEET JOHNNY KILBANE

NO matter what was done or said at the Pilgrim Athletic Club last Tuesday night, when the referee became affected with a peculiar form of mental collapse in he came out of the ring clinch at the finish of the Crosse-Houck bout, the directorate of the new club was apparently sincere when the announcement was made of its intention of giving Boston the best the pugilistic market afforded.

The club now comes through and presents its members with nothing less than a match for the featherweight championship of the world, between Johnny Kilbane, the new holder of the title, the boy who made the great Attell look bad at Los Angeles, and Boston's pride, Jimmy Walsh.

The boys will box twelve rounds to a decision, Tuesday, May 21, for the title.

It was the astute matchmaker Mooney to arrange a bout between Carl Morris and Jack Ferguson for next week's show, but the unexpected defeat of Morris by Luther Mcarthy, promoted the matchmaker to change his plans.

AD WOLGAST, the doughty little light weight champion, will be back in the ring again after a long layoff caused by illness. Wolgast will clash with Willie Ritchie in a fourteen round bout at Frisco.

The outcome of the battle will be anxiously awaited by followers of the mitt game, as Ritchie's Michigan "Wildcat" has not fought since he knocked out Owen Moran at Frisco in thirteen rounds in last Fourth of July.

Ad was scheduled to meet Freddy Welsh on Thanksgiving Day, but on the very eve of battle Wolgast was stricken with appendicitis and an operation was necessary to save the life of the sturdy little fighter.

Tom Jones' protege's great strength aided him greatly in conquering Ritchie. He has spent the past six months regenerating at vaudeville and music halls resorts and now claims that he is as strong as he ever was in his life.

* * *

WHEN Wolgast vanquished Moran he was considered without a peer in the lightweight class. His wonderful strength and terrific punching power enabled him to send across a dream punch inside of fifteen rounds. Ad himself appeared immune to punishment and refused to retreat a single step even after his opponent had riddled him with smashing rights and lefts to the head and body.

Wolgast may not be as strong as he was before he was operated upon, but in such a case Ritchie is liable to do the unexpected. Wolgast is billed to fight five Rivers for the lightweight title on July 4, and if he disposes of Ritchie he will likely be matched to meet Johnny Kilbane over the Metrical.

Some good fighting is sure to be crowded into the four rounds. Wolgast will not stand for anything wonderful in short bouts, but Ritchie is a product of the Coast and knows the game. The battle will be a regular wildcat for this distance.

THE championship wrestling match between Americus and "Cyclone" Burns, which is to take place in the world's Mechanics building on next Monday night, promises to be one of the best ever pulled off in this city. Americus is the light heavyweight champion of the world, but Burns is confident that he will wrest the title from the Baltimore man.

Burns is a Boston boy and has a big following in this city. "Cyclone" is one of the most promising wrestlers in the country and is capable of giving the best of them a bitter battle for supremacy.

Burns is also a fast and clever boxer and is getting heavier every day. Burns has had an enviable career in the wrestling world and has had to be content to be called champion.

Two years ago Burns was a crude wrestler. He was strong and willing but lacked a knowledge of the fine points of the game. "Cyclone," however, was back full of enthusiasm and willing to learn. He improved rapidly and finally gained a reputation which enabled him to hold Walter Willoughby to a draw. The contest lasted for three hours and forty-five minutes without a fall. Willoughby at that time was classed among the world's greatest wrestlers and to get a draw with him was equivalent to a win for Burns.

Many games of importance are down for the schoolboys this afternoon and some great diamond battles are expected. The rain of the past four days held up many contests and some of the teams playing today are performing for the first time this week, so the boys should play some good baseball.

The game between Newton High and Dorchester, to be played on Clafin Field, Newtonville, is of local importance and a large crowd is expected to attend this game.

It appears as if the Dorchester team has struck its gait and it should give the Orange and Black fans a treat on Friday. Warm weather is the only thing the Dorchesterites want now and as soon as it comes Dorchester will be a dangerous opponent. Dorchester has three good pitchers in Brennan, Benson and Mullane, but they cannot pitch in the cold weather.

Dorchester played a good article of ball against South Boston on Thursday. The battery worked good and they were given good support. Captain Gavendall is playing a fine game at third base and Quilty is putting in a fast game at first. Bill Brennan will probably start and Twitchell will do the receiving today.

Town Adler Dickinson will pull Whitney on the mound and expects him to hold the Dorchesterites in check. Whitney is a good fielding game and batting the ball hard and the players are confident that they can trim Dorchester. Nash is putting up a fine game at first base and Real, Taylor, Hyatt and Tucker are also playing good ball.

Somerville High and Ridge, ancient rivals in sport, clash on Recreation Field, Somerville, this afternoon and a merry battle is anticipated. Ridge is none too strong on the diamond this year and Somerville High is favorite.

Walter Whittaker will do the pitching for Somerville and if he is working good he should hold the Cambridge team down to a few hits. The Somerville players are supporting Whittaker in good shape, and although none of the players are hard hitters, in each game someone bangs out a long hit that counts. Quinn, Corrigan is playing a classy game at shortstop and Mitchell, Leland, Lindsay and one or two others are playing a nice bunch of baseball.

Ridge has a nice hitting team, but the the boys are playing a fair fielding game.

* * *

Everett High and Malden clash in a Suburban League game this afternoon at Everett and much interest is connected with the tilt. Everett is the favorite, as it has played better baseball this season and are now a strong hitting team. Cleo O'Donnell's boys are out for a victory. To date Everett has a clean slate in the League series, but several more victories are necessary before the flag is won.

Johnny Murray will do the pitching for Everett and he should be ready to twirl a good game. Murray is only a fair pitcher, but on days when good support and he is backed with a lot of good hitting. Bold will start a hard game around first base, George Brickley is putting up the real goods at his cavtory at second. All of the players are using the club and it has been the hard hitting that gave Everett the top place in the league.

The Malden team is none too strong, but in the league game the players made many rank errors and could not hit the ball.

Changes Are Made in Schoolboy Crews

The crews of Brookline High, Ridge Technical and Cambridge Latin School rowed from the B. A. A. boathouses yesterday, and Stone and Rothery Latin from the Union Boat Club. The water was rather rough, but the coaches were satisfied with the workouts.

Changes were made yesterday in the Brookline High, Ridge and Cambridge Latin crews. In the first named, Pitchbrown was tried out at bow. Holmes, who was rowing No. 2 in the first Ridge boat, was sent back to bow in the second. Flynn, the Cambridge Latin bow, was moved to the second, and Tuttle took his place in the first crew.

Yale and Tigers in Annual Dual Meet

NEW HAVEN, May 11.—Yale and Princeton compete in the annual track meet to-day at Yale Field, with the odds slightly in favor of the Jersey men. The meet is an unknown quantity and misses Thatcher, who strained a tendon some weeks ago. Yale hopes to land all three places in the pole vault, and points in the broad jump, high jump and hurdles.

Howe is expected to prove a dark horse in the hurdles. He only became eligible a few days ago, but has been running in fine form. Wagoner, if he is in good form, is expected to at least equal the intercollegiate record in the pole vault. He has been vaulting twelve feet nine and one-half inches.

The Life and Death of Metals

By Garrett P. Serviss

HOW SALT WATER CORROSION HAS COMPLETED THE WORK AMERICAN GUNS STARTED

AFTER THIRTEEN YEARS—ADMIRAL CERVERA'S FLAGSHIP, THE "VISCAYA," AS SHE NOW LIES OFF THE CUBAN COAST.

The vessel sank here in July, 1898, after the Spanish admiral's dash from Santiago Harbor. Stained by the weather and encrusted with barnacles, a gun turret still raises itself above the sea.

THE two photographs accompanying this article possess a very great interest, not only in their relation to recent American history, but also with regard to the question of the durability of metals under the action of the weather and other destructive forces. They show the present condition of the great armored ships of Admiral Cervera, which were battered to pieces and sunk by the American fleet in the battle of Santiago. Pathetic memories are recalled by the sight of the huge, rounded turret of the Viscaya, projecting above the waves, with its great guns pointed helplessly skyward, for not many months before the outbreak of the brief war that was to send it to the bottom, that vessel, in all the pride of its strength, lay peacefully at anchor in New York Harbor, offering its hospitalities to admiring visitors, when no one dreamed that it would soon be the target for American gunners. Many will remember, with a thrill, the uncertainty that prevailed when the news came that the Viscaya, accompanied by its great consorts, was crossing the ocean, with the possible intention of attacking New York, then a hasty call went out to the Oregon, on the far Pacific Coast.

Battered by hurricanes and Winter storms, these wrecks have lain during all the intervening years on the coast of Cuba, and so little have they apparently been affected by the disintegrating forces to which they have been subjected, that recently our government thought of the possibility of raising and reconstructing them for use in the navy.

It does not seem likely that this project will be carried out, but the sight of the wrecked warships, fighting a more successful battle against the elements than they were able to do against a human enemy, recalls the problem with which science is now dealing, of still further prolonging the life of metals. The constantly growing use of iron and steel, and their various alloys, in constructions of all kinds, renders this problem one of the most important of modern times.

Covered with barnacles, and washed by the pure ocean water, the Viscaya and the torpedo have escaped some of the most destructive forces to which metallic constructions are subjected in other situations. The great enemy of metals is corrosion, and recent investigations have led to the conclusion that this is mainly due to electro-chemical action. It has been proved that stray underground currents from electric railways exercise a powerful effect in disintegrating metals which lie in their way. These wandering currents are very insidious, and sometimes they stray far from their origin, in unexpected ways. As the use of electric power spreads the danger is accentuated.

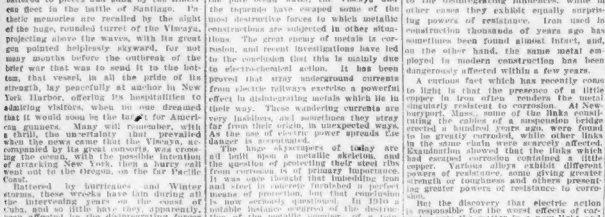
The huge skyscrapers of today are all built upon a metallic skeleton, and the question of protecting their steel ribs from corrosion is of primary importance. It was once thought that imbedding iron and steel in concrete furnished a perfect means of protection, but that conclusion is now seriously questioned. In 1904 a notable instance occurred of the destruction of the metallic members, of a tall forced concrete building, by electrolytic corrosion. Some authorities emphatically declare that concrete is not an infallible protection to imbedded iron and steel. Under the influence of a moist atmosphere concrete generally appears to be capable of penetrating the wet concrete, thus reaching the metal beneath with disastrous effects.

An instance is known in which the short circuiting of lighting currents, in such circumstances, resulted in the corrosion of the concealed metallic members.

The whole theory of metallic corrosion is under investigation, and it presents some strange, and apparently contradictory, phenomena. In some cases iron, steel and other metals yield with surprising rapidity to the disintegrating influences, while in other cases they exhibit equally surprising powers of resistance. Iron used in construction thousands of years ago has sometimes been found almost intact, and on the other hand, the same metal employed in modern construction has been dangerously affected within a few years.

A curious fact which has recently come to light is that the presence of a little copper in iron often renders the metal singularly resistent to corrosion. At Newburyport, Mass., some of the links constituting the cables of a suspension bridge erected a hundred years ago, were found to be greatly corroded, while other links in the same chain were scarcely affected. Examination showed that the links which had escaped corrosion contained a little copper. Various alloys exhibit different powers of resistance, some giving greater strength or toughness and others presenting greater powers of resistance to corrosion.

But the discovery that electric action is responsible for the worst effects of corrosion puts the matter in a new light, and may lead to a solution of the problem. It is a curious thought that, in bending the vast energy of electricity to his purposes, man has endangered some of the things most useful to him. He has let loose myriad forces which tend to shorten the life of metals upon whose long continuance much of his greatest work depends.



AFTER THIRTEEN YEARS—THE "ALMIRANTE OQUENDO" AS SHE NOW LIES OFF JUAN GONZALES.

This vessel also sank near the shore of Cuba in July, 1898. President Taft has spoken of raising one or two of these vessels for future active service, but from the view's given above they do not appear to be worth the trouble.

The Manicure Lady

"GEORGE," said the Manicure Lady, "was you ever to the Aquarium over in New York?"

"How many times are you going to ask me that?" demanded the Manicure Lady's friend, the Head Barber.

"I didn't know that I ever asked you that," she replied. "But if you don't want me to tell about all the funny little fish I seen there, George, and the big, clumsy fish, I must tell you about another excursion that me and brother Wilfred and sister Mayme went to when we and father were over in New York.

"The place that we went, George, was to the Museum of Natural History. You wouldn't believe me, if I was to tell you all the queer animals we seen stuffed there. We wanted father to go along with us, too, as he didn't seem to have nothing to do, but it seems the old gent was up there once just after he had made up his mind to lay off on the strong drinks. And from what mother told me the poor old boy no sooner got into the door than he ran plumb up against a glass case full of dinosaurs, or bloaurs, or whatever they used to call them big animals that lived here the early days. The guide showed us one skeleton that looked like the skeleton of a big, hairy fish, and I can easy imagine the effect it must have had on the nerves of the old gent, brave as he usually is.

"Anyhow, George, it was great to roam around in that great museum and see the animals that lived in them days. Honest to goodness, I was almost sure that most of them was fakes, until brother Wilfred assured me and Mayme that there had been such creatures once. Wilfred explained how they got stuffed, which I forget by means, and he said they had lived their life and went the way we all must go. It made me feel kind of sad, George, when I stood in front of one of them big dinosaur skeletons. Just what was the matter with the big thing when it died the guide couldn't tell us, but I bet its folks must have felt pretty sad.

"It is a great education, George, to go into one of them museums and see all the different kinds of animals of the past and present. I never knew there was so many animals that looked different than us. They had a stuffed elephant there that Wilfred said was a mammoth. It was over three times as big as one of Ringling's elephants, and stood twice as high in its bare feet. I could have stood there looking at the great thing all day, but Wilfred started writing an ode to a mammoth skull, and when he got to the fourth line!

"For many hours, skull, I shall write of thee,' me and Mayme nudged him and woke him up. Then we trekked along until we was tired, and after we had saw all the wonderful things there was to be saw we went to a restaurant across the street and Wilfred treated us to lunch—out of my mesh purse, mind you. It was a grand day, George.'

"I wouldn't want to see none of them freaks," said the Head Barber.

"Is that so?" sniffed the Manicure Lady. "Then why are you looking in the glass?"

Daysey Mayme and Her Folks

MOTHER'S DAY

By FRANCES L. GARSIDE

WHEN a number of appreciative souls succeeded a few years ago in having the second Sunday in May set aside as Mother's Day, they little knew what a day of noble sacrifice they were preparing for Daysey Mayme Appleton.

It is a day when in homes, church and Sunday school special homage is shown to mother; pink carnations to be given the mothers who are present, and a white carnation to be worn in memory of the mother who has gone away.

"It is the day," says Daysey Mayme with modest avoidance of praise, "when I never forget I have a mother."

Tomorrow is Mother's Day, and Daysey Mayme has had her picture taken for the Sunday papers showing her in her favorite methods of celebration.

"I always begin my celebration of this most sacred of all days," said Daysey Mayme, "by lying in bed a little later in the morning.

"I do this that I may have the hour for undisturbed meditation. As I lie there and think of the goodness of my mother, the faint sound of the slamming and dropping of kitchen utensils comes to my ear, forming an appropriate accompaniment to my thoughts.

"She is not there getting breakfast for ME! She is experiencing the greatest joy life holds for a mother, and that is the joy of service. When I think of all this needs to her I am glad I was born. I feel repaid for all the sorrows life has brought to me.

"I always purchase my carnations on Saturday, and take pride in getting at least five dozen. It takes that many to make a corsage bouquet large enough to express my love, and, fortunately, father has an account at the florists. Then, too, I always remember that he being a Mere Man, and devoid of sentiment, will forget the day, and I pay an extra dozen to make up for his lack of appreciation.

"I always prepare a little poem to recite while my mother serves me at breakfast. I had thought of one like this:

"Why so gay, Food Mother,
Prithee, why so glad?
Is't because dead me, Dear Mother,
Because thou a daughter had?

"But I felt after many flights with the Muses that this would be sweeter because it mentions the carnations:

"Ah, my soul doth poke and swing,
From its earthly habitations,
Recklessly its life 'twould fling
For this bunch of pink carnations.

"I will recite one of my own after I have dressed for church, indicating my carnations and the flight of my soul with appropriate gestures.

"I will bring company home with me to dinner. I always feel that the day furnishes opportunity for me to be a Shining Example to other sons and daughters, and my guests will hear no praise of mother while we eat the splendid dinner I shall ask her to prepare. Then while she does the dishes I shall read or will take my guests to the parlor and play Mendelssohn's Spring Song on the piano, leaving the doors to the kitchen open that she may hear. Dear, dear mother.

"In the afternoon I will go with my guests for a walk, and return alone for tea. I will devote some time in marking selections for her to read while I am at church, all bearing on the joy of being a Mother.

"I will attend services in the evening for the reason that one can not go to church too often on Mother's Day. Then there is the chance that some young man will take me home, giving me opportunity to ask him if he appreciates his mother. Alas, so few do!

"I shall insist on my mother retiring early. And when I go to her room to say good-night, I will tell her all the praises the preacher gave mothers, and how tears of gratitude ran down my cheeks because I have a mother.

"It will be such a beautiful day of noble sacrifice," Daysey Mayme said in conclusion, "that it is worthy of being done in moving picturettes."

And having said that, she paid Mother's Day the greatest tribute she knew.

Married Life the Third Year

No. 37—A Letter from Helen's Mother Asking Her to Do Some Shopping

By MABEL HERBERT URNER

Carterstown, Mo.
April 27, 1912.

Dear Helen—Could you do a little shopping for me? I know it is hard to shop for other people, and that is why I try not to send to you often. But Mrs. Dawson has so much work this Spring that she cannot make me anything until July, and you know there is no one else out here.

What I want most is some kind of a good white dress. All last Summer I wore shirt waists with my black silk skirt for best, but I thought this Spring I would like at least one good white dress.

I intended to have your Cousin Molly come and help me do some sewing this Spring, but since George's little girl is so sick, she has to stay with them. And with this calamity thrust in my hand I can do very little sewing myself—nothing good.

Now about the dress—it seems to me some kind of a plain white mulle or India linen, with a few tucks or a very little lace. Not much lace—you know I don't like things very fussy or much trimmed. Something simple and well made with a good full skirt, three-quarter sleeves and high neck. She DOES like a pleated ruffle around the bottom, but if they run small perhaps you had better get 40—that will allow for shrinking.

Mrs. Parish got a very pretty one last year at Chicago, but it had elbow sleeves and round neck—and that wouldn't look well on a woman of my age. (Helen smiled as she read this, and thought of the woman much older than her mother who wore elbow sleeves, low neck and peek-a-boo waists.)

I thought you ought to get something pretty cheap for about $20. As I wrote you we are papering the dining and sitting room this Spring and putting down new floors on the side porch, so I don't think I would care to pay much more than that. I have seen a number of very pretty white dresses at the mail order houses from $12 to $15. I am enclosing a clipping of one. Of course this would be much too fancy for me, but I judge from this that you should be able to get a very good plain one for about $20.

I looked at Strauss' and at the Trade Palace here, but you know they never have anything. They wanted to order me something, but I tried that two years ago. I let them order that gray suit, and you know what it was like.

And now, Helen, if it isn't asking too much, I should like to have you get me some kind of a hat or bonnet also. Just something small and close-fitting, that I can wear a veil with. And it should be light—you know I cannot wear anything heavy; it gives me the headache. Either all black or with a little touch of white or lavender. However, I will leave that to you.

You remember the one I got in Chicago about five years ago—black lace straw with a bunch of violets and black velvet ties? Father always liked that so much, thought it looked better on me than anything I ever had. But I suppose they're not wearing ties now. Anything you select I am sure will please me. But I think you ought to get the hat for about $5 or $6.

I am enclosing a money order for $20, in case you should have to pay a few dollars more for either the dress or hat. If you should have any left you might get a pair of black kid gloves, size 6½. I like the soft, thin kid, not the stiff, heavy kind.

Now do not worry over this shopping. You know I am not hard to please and will be satisfied with anything you send.

I am writing this in the dining room by the open window, and the whole place is filled with the odor of hyacinths. How I wish I could send you some! That bed by the back porch has never done so well. The tulips are all in bloom and the big lilac bush by the cistern is just coming out. The garden is looking fine. Your father says things are a little late this year, but it seems to me they are all doing well.

Am sending you a recipe I cut out the other day for lemon jelly cake. I made some last week and it was delicious, and as it was so easy to make, would like for you to try it. It calls for almond flavoring, but if you don't happen to have any vanilla will do as well—that is what I used.

Now, Helen, do write me—a long letter. Your letters have been so short since Warren returned. I know you are busy, but I do so love to hear from you, and know what you are doing. You said you thought things would be very much better now since Warren's trip was so successful and his business had improved. I do hope this is so.

You will find nothing about coming home for a visit this Summer. Don't you think you could plan to come—at least for a week or so? Perhaps Warren could come out after you. If you could come during the fruit season we could put up a lot of fruit for you to take back. Father says this is going to be an unusually good peach year.

Well, I must close. Am afraid this is a long and tiresome letter.

With much love,

YOUR MOTHER.

P. S.—Be sure and get a full shirt, as you know I don't look well with anything stretched over my hips. Can't wear those narrow skirts. Think I would like a pleated skirt, for that would be nice and wide around the bottom.

Helen Is in Doubt

HELEN read this letter with a mingled feeling of tenderness, amusement and dismay. How little her mother knew of Boston styles and Boston prices!

Above everything else Helen dreaded to shop for other people, even for her mother. Always she felt the responsibility, the fear to quiet, conservative old ladies.

She smiled as she looked at the advertisement her mother had clipped—evidently from some home or fashion magazine.

"GET THIS $25 DRESS FOR $15!" ran the headline. "Style 8104—Dainty, serviceable, imported all-over white embroidery. Set in sleeves. Novel side revers and stylish fluted frill. Graceful skirt finished with pearl buttons and box pleated back panel. Sizes 32 to 42 bust."

Helen looked at the picture of the mythologically impossible, slim, slender-waisted, no-hipped young woman, and wondered how her dear, comfortably stout mother would look in a dress like that. Of course, her mother had said she did not wish anything so fancy and that she wanted high neck and long sleeves. And she reasoned if she could get this simple, tailored dress with all its embroidery and lace for $15, she ought to get a very good plain one for $20.

But just here her reasoning was wrong. For in Boston it is simplicity that you must pay for. You can get a dress trimmed with yards and yards of lace and insertion, for half of what you will have to pay for a plain one. The cheaper the garment the fancier it is.

And to get anything with long sleeves and high neck in a white Summer dress—Helen felt the utter impossibility of that. And the bonnet—the little, modest, close-fitting bonnet! She knew how hard that would be to find in Boston, where the women of seventy wear huge hats, with nodding plumes. However, she must try.

It was true that her mother rarely asked her to do any shopping, and now she must do the best that she could.

Conscience Stricken

And Helen felt conscience stricken that she had written her so little lately. She remembered how when Warren was away and she had been so anxious and unhappy she had written her mother almost every day. It had helped then to have some one to hold to, but now since she needed her less she had written only short, hurried notes.

And now with an impulsive desire to make amends she sat down at once and wrote her mother a long letter telling her many things about the house, about Winifred, about her own Spring clothes, and about their day in the country with the Baldwins.

Helen knew her mother loved to hear of all the little details of her life and she felt that she had been very selfish in not writing. About the dress and that she wrote guardedly—said she would start out as soon as she could tomorrow morning and see what she could find.

But after she had mailed the letter she kept on thinking of her mother—her generous, self-sacrificing mother whose life in that small Western town was after all very narrow, and there was in it little of change or pleasure.

And Helen resolved that even though the hat and dress cost much more than $30, even though she must pay for plainness much in excess of that still she would say it herself and say nothing, rather than have her mother disappointed in her very modest and natural desire for "one good white dress" and "a little close fitting bonnet."

AMERICANS ARE COWARDS WE MUST HAVE REVENGE FOR THE ABROGATION OF THE TREATY I DEFY ALL AMERICANS
DESMOND YOU COWARD HAVE YOU NO PATRIOTISM?
YES, I AM AN AMERICAN AND I ACCEPT YOUR DEFY AND THAT OF ALL RUSSIA
YOUR LOVER IS LOST HE IS BEING TAKEN TO THE DREADED CHIEF OF THE THIRD SECTION
CURSES I INCARCERATED DESMOND AND ROSAMOND

I.—"I AM INNOCENT."

Vainly does the brave Claude Eclaire protest to the dreaded secret police that he is an innocent man and that his arrest was due entirely to the evil doings of Desmond. The police will not listen, and the villain, who is Rosamond in his power, chuckles cruelly at the terrible predicament of his brave rival going to such a horrible fate.

II.—TO THE DUMA.

No Russian can resist a caviar sandwich. So when Claude's captor pauses at a store where one is to be bought he leaves the prisoner outside and hurries in. This is Claude's opportunity and he makes the most of it. He knows one of the members of the Russian Duma and knows that he can depend upon him for all possible protection.

III.—IN THE CHAMBER.

The famous Russian orator, Duboky, of the Duma, recognizes Claude and promises to save him. Our gallant hero is hidden under the member's desk, and as soon as the meeting ends he will be smuggled into the parliamentarian's house, where he will be safe even from the dreaded secret police who spy through Russia for the Czar.

IV.—DOWN WITH AMERICA.

One of the members of the Duma is making a speech in which he bitterly denounces America for the abrogation of the Russian treaty. Desmond, in the visitors' gallery with Rosamond, applauds the speaker for his great eloquence, although it is Desmond's native country that is being attacked. This horrifies Rosamond, even with her knowledge of the villain.

V.—"I AM AN AMERICAN!"

Suddenly Claude, although he knows that his discovery means death or torture even worse, jumps up from his hiding place and announces that he is an American. He cannot bear his country traduced at any cost whatever. For a moment the Duma is stunned, but quickly the members recover themselves and Claude is in for it.

VI.—THE DREADED CHIEF.

Claude is once again in the hands of the Russian police. This time he is to be taken before the dreaded chief of the Third Section, who directs all the activities of the secret branch of the police force, and is responsible for the safety of the Czar himself. Monday's pictures will show how Claude is treated by this dread official.

A Story of Japanese Plotters—Love, Mystery and Tragedy—Based on the Great Play Now Running in New York

THE JAPANESE IS UNABLE TO RESIST ILLONA'S CHARM

By J. W. M'CONAUGHY.

Copyright, 1912 by American-Journal-Examiner.

"OH," she cried, flinging herself off the divan and picking up her wrap off a chair, with a vicious slap, "your everlasting work! Well, I'll come back later—about midnight."

"Illona, you must not come back."

"Not come back!" she repeated, slowly and wonderingly, as she stared with great round eyes at his cold, impassive face. There was a little silence and then she broke out bitterly: "I know! It's that man!" she pointed to the door through which Joshakawa had so recently vanished. "You've always this way after he has been here. As if you didn't have enough to worry you with that old Jill-joy hanging over you like an undertaker! Well, I'll come back later, anyway!"

"Illona, you must never return!"

The woman gave a quick gasp and took one swift stride toward him.

"What!" she exclaimed in a low voice. Then: "I—I don't think I understand you."

He looked into her eyes with eyes that told nothing.

"You must leave at once and never return!" he repeated as dispassionately as if he were dismissing a servant.

"Why—why! Why—what's the matter? Have you—you—" in a low voice, her bosom beginning to heave.

"It would be better not to go into that," he said, coldly. "It is enough—you must leave at once and never return."

The woman crept nearer to him and half held out her hands, fearfully. "Tokoramo!" she exclaimed, in a voice barely above a whisper. "You are joking!"

A Woman's Rage

He looked at her in a way that left no doubt on that point. "You must go, Illona!"

Her eyes began to flash.

"Why?" she demanded, her little white teeth clenched and her face as white as her teeth.

"I do not wish to quarrel with you. I would be kind to the end—this is the end! I ask you to go at once."

"But—why—why!"

"I do not care to say. Go!"

"But," she cried, with proud anger, "you cannot look at me like that and say such things—and not tell me why!"

"It is better so," he said again, with no change in his cold, impressive tone. "I would be kind to the end. Go, Illona!"

A touch of hectic color appeared instantly in the woman's cheeks. Her eyes blazed.

"Do you think I will be cast off like this—like a worn-out coat? Ah, no, no!" she exclaimed with a sudden cry, and began moving toward him. "You don't want to make me angry. Tell me what has happened—what is wrong? Am I not your Illona? Have I not waited all through the evening for you with my heart in my throat—is there?" She pointed to the divan. "Did I not lie there, throbbing with love and sympathy, while you sat here and worked?" Her voice broke for an instant. Have I not been your quiet, comforting slave, ready you by every way you would let me? And now you say I must go—without a word, without a reason—well!" Her anger blazed on again. "I will not go! Do you hear?" She threw herself into a chair. "I have a right to a little more consideration than that! I have had a little corner in your heart—it has not been much, but I have had it! And I will hold it!" He stood looking at her without a ripple on his face, until she sprang up with a cry that was almost a snarl.

"For goodness sake, say something! Don't stand there and look at me like that!"

Tokoramo calmly closed the drawer in his desk and drew it open. There was a clink of coin.

"I would be kind to the end, Illona," he said. "You shall have as much money as you desire."

The words struck the last drop of blood from the woman's face.

"Money!" she gasped, in a horrified whisper.

"Yes," he said, and stood expectantly at the open drawer. She bowed her head and pressed both hands tightly to her face.

"Oh!" she moaned. "You never loved me—you never loved me! Is that what you think of me? Is that what you think of me?"

He opened his lips to speak, but she went on without heeding.

"You never loved me! You never loved me! But tonight!" She stretched out her arms to him shrilly: "Tonight—tonight! He wields a—you said you did, when we were alone—and I believed you! I thought that underneath the ice you had core that a drop of warmth—one little drop of love—that you had a heart to have given across my all! You have stripped me of my thoughts, my dreams—for all! And now you say I can have money—and go!"

A shadow of pain passed across the man's face. His eyes burned a little brighter as he strode swiftly up to her and stared her in the face.

"Why do you lie?" he demanded in a low, passionate voice.

"Lie!" exclaimed the woman, falling back a step before him.

"Yes, Illona—you lie! You have declared me—and you knew all. Now—"

"No, no!" she cried.

"You have lied! You deceived me about Lindener! Why do you lie?"

The Confession.

"Oh, my love! Please!——"

"Did you not deceive me?" he demanded, harshly. His eyes held hers and they stared in silence while second after second slipped away. At last she suddenly covered her face with her hands and turned away.

"Yes!" she whispered.

She did not see him wince and his eyes gaze no more in the pain in his heart.

"It is enough! Go!" And he pointed to the door. But the woman faced him in desperation. She was fighting for something she had wanted all her life and had found—only to lose it in the hour of discovery.

"Yes—if you will have it—I did!" she cried. And then, in a kind of desperate, hopeless compassion. "Oh, you blind one! Can't you feel the truth—or are you a man without blood—without a soul? Are you not even alive? Can't you see how I have fell—how I have suffered? How I need you, whether you love me or not? Did you play with Lindener! What had I to expect from you!—her voice broke with a sob—"but that sooner or later you would go home and leave me here to eat out my heart with grief—to die of longing for you! You stood first in my life—and I have not even stood second to you! And Lindener wants to marry me!"

"All this does no good, Illona," he said coldly, when she paused for breath. "I would be kind and just—whatever you are."

"Whatever I am!" she cried bitterly. "Whatever I have been in your life for you has been the true thing in my life! Can't you see that——"

"You are making this very hard for me, Illona," he said, as calm as before, but the passionate note in his voice grew as he spoke on. "I don't wish to part in bitterness. You know you have wronged me—deceived me—that every day, as you were deceiving me you were growing more and more into my life—into my work. When you came I was turned from my work. I have turned from it for you! And you, while you were deceiving me!—that Lindener had asked you honorably to be his wife and, whatever you may think of me, of the world thinks of me and my people, Illona, our honor in affairs of this kind is more sacred! And it is in my honor—and in my trust—that you have wronged me!"

The sobs ceased and the woman's face suddenly lit up with angry scorn.

"So! Ha! It is that!" she cried. "I guess it! It is not Lindener!—it is not my deception! It is your people! They are afraid!—the voice broke again—"afraid that you will give one little hour of your life to me! To happiness—pleasure—peace! And it is me that you are sacrificing for them!—giving up all the joy of your life and mine—and for nothing! Why should you sacrifice both our lives for this? If later you would go home and leave me here to eat out my heart with grief—to die of longing for you! You stood first in my life—and I have not even stood second to you! And Lindener wants to marry me!"

"All this does no good, Illona," he said coldly, when she paused for breath. "I would be kind and just—whatever you are."

Best Interior Player-Piano THE AUTOPIANO

The Autopiano unites in a single instrument a high-class upright, which can be played with the hands like any piano, and the player-piano, which is played with the perforated music-roll (the new way), thus enabling anyone, young or old, to render in a finished manner any musical composition. The construction of the Autopiano is very durable, and, unlike others, who use rubber tubes in connection with the pneumatic action, is not affected by heat, and are indestructible, its sweet tone is unequaled.

THE FAMOUS AUTOPIANO.

Are the Phantom Promises Petering Out?

We Learn That Mr. Mellen Will Spend $100,000,000 on Electrifying, Tunnelling and So On, If THIS LEGISLATURE Will Hurriedly Lease the Boston & Maine to the New Haven. But the Records Show That in 1910 Mr. Mellen Was About to Begin the Expenditure of $50,000,000 FOR THE SAME PURPOSES. Has His Imagination Gone Back on Him? Couldn't He Have Thought of a New Promise?

News comes down from the State House that President Mellen of the "New England Lines"—Mr. Mellen bosses 9,000 miles of railroad in New England—will set about the expenditure of $100,000,000 on improvements in this jurisdiction IF the present Legislature will hurriedly authorize the lease of Mr. Mellen's Boston & Maine Railroad to Mr. Mellen's New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Company.

Mr. Mellen is the gentleman who looks after New England for the House of Morgan.

Mr. Mellen's promise has a familiar ring to it. Somehow we seem to have heard it before. One cannot be positive about this, for Mr. Mellen has made MANY PROMISES TO NEW ENGLAND. Only one man. Mr. Mellen's vice-president, has made more. There is hardly a junction point in these Northern States which hasn't thrived and metropolitanized of an evening under the spell of Mr. Byrnes's expenditure of a few millions at a board of trade banquet.

The President of the New Haven, IF THE LEGISLATURE OF 1912 WILL BE QUICK AND BE GOOD, will now spend $100,000,000 in electrifying and tunnelling.

Folks who read the newspapers, and who believe in them, may be pardoned if they had supposed the work of electrifying and tunnelling was well under way.

When Mr. Mellen took over the control of the Boston & Maine, in September, 1910, it was given out by "one in authority" that $50,000,000 was to be expended within the next five years for "the complete electrification of the suburban services of the two railroads." The building of a freight and passenger tunnel from the North Station to the South Station was in the plan.

Mr. Mellen had been given WHAT HE WANTED AT THAT TIME. HOW MUCH OF THE $50,000,000 HAS BEEN EXPENDED?

On January 1, 1911, Vice-President Byrnes forecasted the New Year on the twin systems. He said:

> The great task of the coming year will, therefore, be that of adjusting traffic conditions in such ways as will move business more promptly and without delays that have been inevitable UNDER THE OLD ORDER.

Ask the shippers and traders along the Boston & Maine if business is being moved more promptly under the NEW order! Ask, for instance, those representatives of the Lowell Board of Trade who have recently appeared before the Railroad Committee at the State House to make complaint of outrageous delays, even when the shipping point was but ten miles distant at Nashua, N. H.!

In the month of March, following, Vice-President Byrnes was sure that if Mr. Mellen "remains at the head of these companies for five years the business men of Boston would see such a transportation system here as would make all proud."

We leave it to some business man to say whether he has seen the beginning of these better days.

But President Mellen himself set the fastest pace a year ago last April, when he addressed the Boston Chamber of Commerce at the Hotel Somerset. Most of the New Haven millions have been expended in after-dinner prodigality. He said:

> The arrangements of our company are such that I feel sure I am not at all drawing on my imagination when I say we are practically in alliance with the Pennsylvania Railroad, through the New York Connecting Railroad, which we are jointly building, with the New York Central Railroad, through the Grand Central Station investment, and our recent arrangements regarding the Boston & Albany and Rutland roads—and I feel more than certain within no great time we shall have most intimate relations with Canadian lines, in view of which IT IS PROMISE OF A BUSINESS SUCH AS WE HAVE NEVER BEFORE BEEN ABLE TO CONSIDER IN THE WAY OF CARGO FOR SUCH STEAMSHIPS AS SHALL SEEK THIS PORT.

And in May, 1911, exactly one year ago:

> A great increase in the transatlantic steamship business at Boston is practically assured by the plans to that end made by the railroads. The three great companies, the New York, New Haven & Hartford, the Boston & Maine and the New York Central, are now for the first time acting in unison for the development of this port. In consequence, AN ENORMOUS AMOUNT OF EXPORT TRAFFIC IS TO BE DIVERTED TO BOSTON.

INSTEAD OF WHICH THE FIGURES SHOW THAT BOSTON HAS FALLEN BEHIND AND IS STILL FALLING.

When it looked as if the Boston & Eastern electric railroad proposition was likely to be successful at the State House, Mr. Mellen wanted to acquire the Boston, Revere Beach & Lynn, extending it to Beverly and "perhaps" farther. He "might" standardize the gauge, too.

The AMERICAN will not today attempt a compilation of the promises or a characterization of the "promisers" of the New Haven Railroad.

Instead let us call upon a prominent and representative citizen of this Commonwealth, and let HIM say what HE thinks about them. Our witness is Mr. Edward Kemble, formerly President of the Boston Chamber of Commerce. He said after one of Mr. Mellen's promise speeches:

> Mr. Mellen's address is like a bubble, blown of soft soap and air. When the author throws some brightness on it, by means of his fanciful word-pictures, it appears somewhat attractive, but prick it anywhere and it will collapse at once.

Mr. Mellen appears to have a magic wand which ultimately gets him what he wants at the Massachusetts State House. What Massachusetts needs is A PUBLIC BOARD WITH THE POWER TO COMPEL MR. MELLEN AND HIS RAILROAD TO MAKE GOOD.

The Risks an American Takes Who Marries a Foreigner

By DOROTHY DIX

A MAN asks me what I think about of marriages between Americans and the men and women of other nationalities.

There is no general rule by which the likelihood of the success or failure of any marriage may be determined beforehand. It depends upon the individual. It is a purely personal matter, and whether a marriage between an American and a foreigner results in happiness or in misery rests with the character and temperament of the man and woman who undertake to work out their life problem together.

Conceding that all marriage is a lottery, and full of risks and dangers, I should say that when Americans marry foreigners they take an added risk and run a greater danger, and that there are more chances against them in the lottery. When an American marries an American he or she has, at least, a sporting chance at domestic felicity, but when an American marries a foreigner he or she takes a hundred to one shot at happiness.

This is no reflection upon the men and women of other nations, or upon their desirability as husbands or wives. It is merely a reiteration of the old truth that we find those people most congenial and easiest to get along with who have the same tastes and habits as we have. Who have been bred to the same ideals, and have the same point of view.

Heaven knows, the average husband and wife find enough to argue over and enough points of conflict without throwing in different nationality, different religion, different traditions, and a different style in cooking! Hence, those who wish peace in the household do well to espouse those of their own race, faith and color, and who think as they do, from politics to pie.

The only statistics that are obtainable regarding international marriages are those that deal with great matches where American heiresses have married men of title. With scarcely an exception, these have turned out disastrously, but as in these cases the man sold himself for money and the woman sold herself for social position, they prove nothing in regard to the wisdom or folly of Americans marrying foreigners. Any marriage entered into with the same motives would bring nothing but misery.

Indisputably there are many happy and successful marriages, inspired by love alone, in which one of the parties is an American and the other a foreigner, the marriage of Americans and English and Americans and Germans being particularly apt to be harmonious and to produce splendid children.

The marriage of an American man with a foreign woman stands a better chance of success than that of an American woman with a foreign man, and yet, paradoxically enough, this marriage takes place far less frequently than that of the American woman to the foreign man. It is undeniable that, as a rule, the foreign woman does not attract the American man, while the foreign man has an almost irresistible attraction for the American woman.

The explanation of this psychic phenomenon shows why the international match is seldom a happy one. The men of every nation, through many generations, have trained their women to be the kind of wives that they want, the kind of wives that suit their tastes.

The Englishman has evolved the splendid sturdy pattern of all the virtues—the British matron who has been taught to take a back seat and amuse herself by hearing children and burning incense before her lord and master.

The German has trained up the hausfrau, whose sole business in life is to vibrate between the kitchen and the nursery, and make her husband comfortable.

The Frenchman has produced a wife who is the hybrid of femininity, a woman who can save money and look like a fashion plate, who can grant him all liberty and ask none for herself, and who can keep up the fiction of a perfect family life so artistically that she comes to believe in it herself.

The men of the Latin countries have created a wife that stays "put" in the chimney corner, and who does salaams before the superior being she calls husband.

But the American man has devised a wife who is one part goddess, one part toy and plaything. He gives her all the freedom in the world. He delights in indulging her. He adores spending his money in dressing her up, and it annoys him to death when she sasses him.

The American woman represents the American man's taste in wives. That's why she suits him, and that's why she is caviar to the palate of the men of other nations and why she disagrees so with foreigners when they marry her.

Foreigners always say that the American woman is spoiled. Very likely. But she is as she is, even as the foreign man is as he is, and that is why there is small chance for harmony when two such diverse natures come together in the close quarters of matrimony. How can the woman who has been used to having her own way all her life expect to be happy when she marries a man who is accustomed to seeing the men of his family take all the best, and the wives content with anything that happens to be left over?

Nor would the situation be any better for the man, for he, whose ideal of a wife is Patient Griselda, must get a horrible shock when he finds out that he is tied up with spunky American Mary Ann, and that instead of fading meekly into the background of domesticity she insists on standing in the limelight of society, and that her penchant is not for the kitchen, but the parlor, and her talent not for saving, but for spending money?

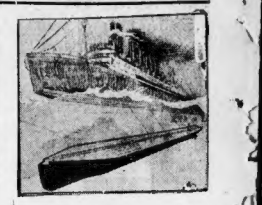
For these, and many other reasons, a man is wise to marry among his own people. There are enough troubles and trials in matrimony, anyway, without dragging in international complications.

LIFE AGAINST MONEY

It was Not Lack of Knowledge, but Defiance of It, That Sunk the Titanic.

Copyright, 1912, by American-Journal-Examiner.

IF the public does not now, and from this time forward, with tireless patience, insist upon the reforms in ship building, and ship management, whose necessity has been made so frightfully apparent by the criminal Titanic disaster, it will have to share the blame for the next calamity of that kind which occurs. Wise men do not walk into known danger that can be avoided.



Since the loss of the Titanic scores of ways have been pointed out—NEARLY ALL OF WHICH WERE KNOWN BEFOREHAND—by which every life endangered by that reckless collision with an iceberg might have been saved. The AMERICAN will illustrate, in its Sunday Magazine tomorrow, nine devices, chosen out of a great number, the employment of which would undoubtedly have cost the White Star line some money, but which would have saved the lives that were sacrificed to greed.

You will be impressed by the picture of a huge steamship floating safely on the surface of the ocean, WHILE ITS DETACHABLE HULL, pierced by an iceberg, and fast filling with water, sinks beneath without carrying a single human being down with it.

You may ask: "Couldn't such a device be used in practice?"

That is a question for the shipbuilders to answer. THEY HAVEN'T TRIED IT. If they had tried it—or some similar device—perhaps the Titanic horror would never have blotted the pages of history.

Lewis Nixon, the shipbuilder, the man who designed the Oregon, declares that pontoons offer the only sure means of safety, and you will see a picture of a huge pontoon deck sliding from a sinking ship, and bearing to safety its load of living freight.

These things would take room, cost money, and perhaps crowd out some of the luxurious appointments by which steamship owners are enabled to increase their prices—and so they are not even tried.

The owners of the Titanic, having constructed their ship instead of being provided with lifeboats only enough for a third of her passengers and crew (and some of which were swamped in the launching), had had a detachable pontoon deck! It was possible to have such a device, because the suggestion of it is not new. BUT THE OWNERS OF SUCH SHIPS DO NOT WANT SUGGESTIONS, EITHER OLD OR NEW, UNLESS THEY ARE SUGGESTIONS FOR SAVING MONEY.

You will also be impressed by the picture and description of Captain Evans' TRIPLE STEAMSHIP, one of whose units might have its hull demolished without sinking, because the others would sustain it.

Then, there are several very interesting and effective kinds of "life globes," life rafts, and life barges, and one of these devices is already in use in the United States Life-Saving Service. In short, you will see that it is not knowledge, or ingenuity, or invention that is lacking in this matter, but simply the disposition to VALUE LIFE ABOVE MONEY.

When you have digested this exhibition of the price that the public pays in order to put money into the pockets of men who leave women and children to drown, you may turn to other, less tragic things. You will see WHAT USE SOME PEOPLE MAKE OF LIFE; as, for instance, the amusement of a Paris actress who sets the fashion for the costly habitments of pet dogs. She spends entire afternoons in shopping for her dogs. "Equipping a dog," says this leader of canine fashion, "is a study in harmony."

You will laugh at the adventures of young Livingston Mason, with his houseboat, anchored under the nose of fashion in Newport harbor; you will be interested by Professor Stonaker's experiments with meat-fed and vegetarain rats at Stanford University; you will read more of the achievements of the scientific detectives who have put Sherlock Holmes out of date, and you will find many facts and hints of practical importance, none of which exceeds in interest, just now, the careful information that is given about the way to 'cut the meat bill," and still not go without meat.

And, then, there are the funny adventures of the "Katzenjammers," the mule "Maud," "Happy Hooligan," "Jimmy," and the "Kid" of wonderful dreams.

Suppose that the Titanic, on the old plan, assured the public that it was absolutely unsinkable. The statement was ridiculous. They knew, if they knew anything, that an iron shell, weighing 50,000 tons, hurled against an immovable iceberg, weighing millions of tons, at a speed of 37 feet per second, must, on striking, develop MORE THAN A MILLION FOOT TONS OF ENERGY; and that no half-inch walls, and no system of bulkheads, could stand such a strain.

They didn't expect to strike an iceberg, BUT THEY DIDN'T LISTEN TO THE WARNING THAT ICEBERGS WERE IN THEIR PATH.
